Polarized Lenses

.....

Polarized lenses are ideal for people who spend time enjoying the outdoors. They provide a clearer view along with reducing glare. People who are light sensitive after cataract surgery may also benefit from polarized lenses, which can decrease discomfort when exposed to bright light.

Computer Glasses

Computer glasses differ from reading glasses in a number of ways, as they are designed to optimize your vision when viewing your computer screen. The screen is typically 20-26 inches away from the users' eyes. Without computer glasses, many users often suffer from blurred vision, eye strain, and headaches, which are the hallmarks of computer vision syndrome. Worse still, many people try to compensate for blurred vision by leaning forward or tipping their head to look through the bottom of their glasses; both actions may result in a sore neck, back and shoulders.
